Welcome to the 2014 NCDD conference!

Hundreds of the most active, thoughtful, and influential people in public engagement and group process work take the time to come to NCDD, and we are excited that you are one of them this year.

Spending three days with some of the most amazing people in our field and exploring together how we can shape the future of this important movement — there’s nothing quite like it! We encourage you to participate fully and enjoy yourself thoroughly.

This is NCDD’s sixth national conference. Our first conference brought together 225 leaders and innovators in Alexandria, Virginia in October 2002, and we’re thrilled to be coming back full-circle to the DC area in 2014.

In 2002, sixty leaders and fifty organizations (our founding members) in this still-emerging field worked together to convene the first National Conference on Dialogue & Deliberation. Our first conference, and each event since, has drawn hundreds of phenomenal leaders and innovators who were thrilled to be learning from each other’s successes and approaches, developing relationships with new colleagues, and forging new paths for our collective work together. Your energy, spirit, and commitment are what makes all the hard work that goes into planning these events worth it.

Our theme for the 2014 National Conference on Dialogue & Deliberation is...

Democracy for the Next Generation

When we engaged our community back in April (using Codigital) about what they’d like to see happen at this year’s conference, one thing that struck us was how future-oriented the highest rated comments were. People wanted to:

- learn about new technology for engagement
- recruit and support young people and emerging leaders in the field
- find ways to break out of our existing boundaries so we can bring this work to a larger stage
- contribute to building a stronger democracy that is able to address society’s most pressing challenges

Over the next three days, we’ll explore what we want the next generation of our work to look like, and how we might work together to get there. This “next generation” of democracy is the future that embodies the best of what we have to offer the world.

NCDD relies on the commitment and contributions of members of our community, and this conference is no exception. We are grateful to all of our planning team members, sponsors, partners, presenters, field trip hosts, scholarship fund donors, and all others playing small and large roles in helping us pull off this event. Many people and organizations have devoted considerable energy to making this a successful gathering, and we thank all of you for your contributions.

Introducing Your Emcees

We’re thrilled to have two of our most widely adored NCDD members serving as our conference Emcees again for NCDD 2014, providing you with familiar faces throughout the event, introducing presenters, making announcements and helping us transition between activities. John Gastil is the Head of the Department of Communication Arts and Sciences at Penn State University. Susanna Haas Lyons is a public engagement specialist, expert in civic tech and former Senior Associate of AmericaSpeaks.

Welcome to the conference and the conversation!

- We are a community of purposeful practice.
- We are powered and empowered by the work of our members.
- We operate with a very lean staff and budget, and a working board.
- We work together to create value for individual practitioners, the field, and society, and we have fun doing it!
- You are NCDD, and your contribution of time, effort and resources is essential to the continued vitality of our community.

Members are involved in every aspect of NCDD’s work. It is the essence of how we learn and grow together and the best way to get the most out of this amazing community. There are many opportunities for you to get involved, and we want to help you get connected. Please check the “Classifieds” board for gatherings about these opportunities or contact us individually. We look forward to working with you.

NCDD’s Field Mapping Project

There are a vast array of organizations, communities and networks of practice whose work centers around collaborative group practices. This work goes by many different names (dialogue and deliberation, deliberative democracy, whole systems change, collective intelligence, collaborative problem solving, etc.), and NCDD was formed to bridge these and other streams of practice to help us learn from, be inspired by, and work with each other.

The maps you see on the walls are part of a larger mapping project NCDD is conducting in collaboration with the Kettering Foundation. Our interviewer Kathryn Thomson talked with ten highly collaborative organizations that are part of NCDD but work in different (though overlapping) spheres. We worked with ten graphic recorders to create visual maps of each of these organizations’ “ecosystems” of work and partnerships, as conveyed through these interviews.

We all recognize that to achieve our aspirations for the next generation of our work, we will need to find new ways to combine forces. Our aim is to help attendees get a better picture of the points of connection, the overlaps, and the possibilities for collaboration between the myriad networks and organizations that are innovating in this field.

Please use the maps to consider how you and your organization might make further, deeper connections that could increase our field’s capacity. We also hope these ten maps will inspire you as you map out your own ecosystem of work during Friday’s plenary.

Our talented graphic recording team will also be working on a larger graphic Field Map throughout the conference. Check out the map as it develops, and see if you can get a sense of the larger, interconnected system we are all a part of, and your own points of intersection within the system. See page 17 for more.

Graphic Recorders (aka “graphic facilitators” or “visual practitioners”) use visual methods to enhance learning and communication between groups and individuals. Graphic recorders tap into the power of ‘visual thinking’—they literally draw information out of people, functioning as facilitators and scribes to get the wisdom of groups into a tangible form.

Graphic recording has always been a feature of NCDD’s national conferences, and this year is certainly no exception. We’ll have a 10-person graphic recording team with us at the event, and we enlisted graphic recorders in advance of the conference in mapping out the work and partnerships of 10 highly collaborative organizations in NCDD.

Welcoming, Mapping & Grounding

In our opening plenary, NCDD Director Sandy Heierbacher will introduce us to the conference theme, Democracy for the Next Generation, and our goals and hopes for the next few days. Kettering Foundation president David Mathews will orient us to the past and present landscape in Washington for dialogue and deliberation.

When you walk into the room, you’ll see ten large graphic recording maps displayed that illustrate the ecosystems of work and partnerships of some highly collaborative organizations and networks in NCDD. This sets the tone for the rest of the plenary and for the whole conference—where we’re encouraged to think of ourselves more as a collective, and we consider new inroads to collaboration, underutilized sources of knowledge and expertise, and gaps we could work together to fill.

Kathryn Thomson of LeadershipMind Consulting, who conducted the interviews that resulted in the ten maps, will share some of her observations from the project, and then lead us in a collaborative network mapping exercise at our tables inspired by the World Cafe process. This activity will serve as a fun way to network with the amazing people in the room, and will help you get a sense of the whole network, our existing connections, and potential new connections that can be made.

Our graphic recording team, led by Stephanie Brown, will guide you through this iterative mapping process, and will build on themes they notice on the table maps to begin creating a larger Field Map they’ll be working on throughout the conference.

Featured Speakers...

SANDY HEIERBACHER

Sandy Heierbacher co-founded the National Coalition for Dialogue & Deliberation (NCDD) in 2002 with her husband, Andy Fluke, and with the support and involvement of 60 volunteers and 50 organizations. NCDD now represents more than 2,100 organizational and individual members and more than 34,000 subscribers. Under Sandy’s leadership, NCDD has grown into a respected hub, resource clearinghouse, convener, and facilitative leader for a growing community of practice centered around the practices of dialogue and deliberation. Sandy has an M.A. in Intercultural Management from SIT Graduate Institute, and now serves as a Research Deputy with the Kettering Foundation in addition to running NCDD.

DAVID MATHEWS

David Mathews is president of the Kettering Foundation, a nonprofit research foundation rooted in the American tradition of invention. Prior to his work with the foundation, Mathews served as Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare in the Ford administration. From 1965 to 1980, he taught history at the University of Alabama, where he also served as president from 1969 to 1980. Mathews has written extensively on Southern history, public policy, education, and international problem solving. His books include Politics for People: Finding a Responsible Public Voice, Reclaiming Public Education by Reclaiming Our Democracy, and The Ecology of Democracy: Finding Ways to Have a Stronger Hand in Shaping Our Future. Mathews is married to Mary Chapman Mathews, and they have two daughters and six grandchildren.

Connecting Dialogue, Deliberation and Collective Impact
Lake Audubon • Intermediate

The practice of Collective Impact (CI) is taking greater hold in philanthropy and the nonprofit and public sectors as a means to address complex issues requiring multi-sector action for systemic change. Some of the core elements of CI are: developing a common agenda based on trusting relationships between stakeholders, developing a backbone organization for support, and generating and acting on shared goals and metrics. This session will provide a brief overview of the CI model as well as reflections on the types of community conditions that enhance or impede impact. We’ll then discuss: What are the overlaps between dialogue and deliberation work and Collective Impact? What lessons can each field learn from the other?

Creating It Together: Learning, Community Action and Public Engagement
Lake Fairfax B • Intermediate

This interactive discussion will focus on two different universities’ successes and challenges in promoting positive campus-community relations to address short- and long-term strategies for local improvement. Administrators and community partners from Widener U. will share the complexities of cultivating their partnerships with residents in Sun Hill—and the innovative model of democratic engagement that has emerged from this work. Faculty from UNH will share their varied outreach efforts, such as the Plant for Growth project, designed to connect multiple community partners with numerous academic departments to create both meaningful community impact and vibrant educational connections.

Deliberation Boot Camp
Ballroom A • Intermediate

This session will provide an overview of the deliberative perspective and an introduction to many of the key concepts, organizations, and challenges related to the field. Specifically designed for newcomers to the field, the boot camp will help acclimate participants to the conference. Dr. Carcasson’s presentation will focus on the question of “what kind of talk does democracy need?” and will make the case for building deliberative capacity in our communities.

Martin Carcasson, Director, CPD and Associate Professor of Communication Studies, Colorado State University Center for Public Deliberation (and students!)

Democratizing (through) Higher Education: A Route to Democracy for the Next Generation?
Ballroom B • Beginner

“Democracy for the Next Generation” calls for more critical, engaged, and skilled civic agents. And with more of our nation’s youth are attending college on their way to adulthood and the full duties of citizenship, college campuses represent an excellent infrastructure for bolstering the skills, knowledge, and capacities that the next generation needs to participate effectively in democratic processes and governance at all levels in the future. But in order to properly prepare future generations for democracy, higher ed itself needs to become more democratic. This interactive discussion will look at how our field can help campuses democratize their governance and teach more civic skills. This could be a huge “win” for our field, our schools, and our younger generations, but we will also explore the consequences of things staying the same.

Expanding the Conversation on Mental Health – One Living Room at a Time

Ballroom C • Beginner

The number of disabled mentally ill in the U.S. tripled in the last two decades – despite a dramatic rise in psychiatric treatment. What gives? How can we help the ongoing National Dialogue on Mental Health become more productive? Within a system heavily influenced by industry, how can dialogue practitioners work to ensure representation from a diversity of voices? From issues such as medicating children to forced treatment and incarceration, how can a bigger conversation about mental health impact policy-making? Through a brief Living Room Conversation, participants will learn how starting small can help expand the larger mental health conversation.

Revitalization of Main Street: Fine Art and Deliberative Arts Downtown

North Point/Tall Oaks • Beginner

Towns and small cities often have downtown areas, or “main streets” in need of revitalization. Participants in this session will learn how creative partnerships among a community college, town government, and regional businesses can design a space for art, education, culture and deliberation. Manchester Community College’s President, an associate dean, and professor will share how and why the now award-winning “MCC on Main” formed and how its use as an art gallery, education center, and space for downtown deliberation has led to a revitalization of Manchester, Connecticut.

Reviving Congress One District at a Time

Lake Thoreau • Intermediate

The congressional district is the step-child of citizen participation, an under-tapped arena in which to activate concerned citizens to hold their elected representatives accountable for the responsible use of their power. Presenters from No Labels and Voice of the People will speak about their strategies for getting Members of Congress to be more aware of and responsive to the values and priorities of their constituents. After small group exchanges about how these or other D&D resources might be used to help upgrade congress from the ground up, the whole group will brainstorm ideas to share within NCDD.

Storytelling can be an important part of public dialogue work. How can stories discourage civic engagement and relate to “Themification” of others? What can facilitators do to understand the group dynamics of storytelling in dialogue? This session will draw from both experience/practice of dialogue and relevant research on storytelling to explore what stories can “do” to dehumanize, imprison, or liberate. Participants will tell their own stories, listen to/make sense of other peoples’ stories and engage the activist photography of Dick Simon (www.dicksimon.com).

Beyond Books: Librarians, Journalists and Dialogue Professionals Working Together
Lake Anne A • Beginner

What’s possible when information professionals like librarians and journalists work together with dialogue practitioners to inform and engage communities? This session will support a self-organizing format to contemplate: “What’s possible at the intersection of libraries, journalism, and civic practitioners that can serve the information needs of communities and democracy?” Help us answer that question as we convene NCDD conference participants to consider possibilities for involving them with local journalists and librarians to build civic infrastructure and capacity.

Culture Shift in City Government: Defining a New Narrative in Calgary
Lake Anne B • Advanced

The City of Calgary has fundamentally transformed, not just by the output of an engagement initiative, but also by the process of the specific facilitation utilized. Part of the story involves the lead team adopting the Group Pattern Language/Group Works deck to build a common language that allowed a diverse group of stakeholders to give collective expression to a shared emerging vision. This interactive workshop introduces the Group Works deck as a dynamic tool for transforming culture on a large scale, helping you imagine ways you, too, could use this creative tool in your work contexts.

The Deliberative Facilitator: Developing Theory and Practice
North Point/Tall Oaks • Intermediate

This session will address three central questions: What are the responsibilities of a deliberative facilitator, particularly those that are distinct from other facilitation situations? What are the inherent tensions between those responsibilities that we must address? What specific interventions help us fulfill these facilitator responsibilities and negotiate the tensions? After briefly summarizing developing research on these topics from the Colorado State University Center for Public Deliberation, we will break into groups to gather responses and brainstorm additional useful interventions.

“I See What You Mean!” Using Visuals to Engage Communities
Ballroom C • Advanced

When complex ideas and information are captured and shared graphically, people engage more deeply and their commitment to cooperation and collaboration increases. In this interactive session, the facilitators will share a kit bag of visual artifacts they have used to facilitate public meetings involving contentious community issues. Explore two different case studies: one around increasing public engagement in rural communities; the other involving working to create more inclusive conversations about urban visioning. The session also explores the stages of issue engagement.

Restorative Conversations: Bringing Our Best Selves to the Table
Lake Fairfax B • Beginner

Restorative practices prime our best for healthy relationships and learning environments. When difficult situations arise, restorative-minded educators can encourage new mindsets that bring out the best in themselves and their students through inquiry-based, one-on-one processes, for both students who harmed and those who were harmed. Participants will be introduced to restorative conversations and practices, such as double listening and 3-minute peacebuilding, that help students access their own best in understanding the impact of their actions on others.

Making Space for Sacred Convictions in D&D: Threat, Necessity or Opportunity?

Some of the greatest challenges for deliberative practitioners come from convictions – religious or otherwise – held so closely that their adherents consider them “sacred” in some sense. Indeed, no popular consensus exists around how exactly (or even whether) to make space in public dialogue for these beliefs. Using the LGBT/conservative Christian encounter as an example, we will brainstorm strategies for discussions in which sacred beliefs and identity convictions are at stake – as well as exploring how to better work with the considerable resistance and fear that such a dialogue may invoke.

Teaching Next Generation Democracy: High School, College, and Beyond

In this session, we will help each other explore different approaches to teaching discussion skills for next generation democracy. We will share experiences and insights from 3 programs working at different educational levels: the Close Up Foundation’s work teaching democratic skills to high school students, the Wesleyan College-Interactivity Foundation collaboration teaching first-year college students to facilitate their own discussion teams, and James Madison University’s Institute for Constructive Advocacy & Dialogue teaching upper-level college students to facilitate community discussions.

Text, Talk, Act: A Breakthrough in Youth Civic Engagement

Engaging the next generation in our democracy will require a fundamental shift in approach. Text messaging is the most popular digital activity for youth – with over 87% texting monthly. With this in mind, Creating Community Solutions, part of the National Dialogue on Mental Health, developed Text, Talk, Act. Following a brief introduction, participants in the session will join in a Text, Talk, Act event, utilizing cell phones and small group conversation. Presenters will then lead a brainstorming session about how this idea can be brought into our field.

Where is the Public in Public Budgeting?

There is no better expression of the values of a culture than its budget: the formal process for making decisions about where and to whom resources should be directed. Typically, budget decisions are made by elected officials without much public involvement. The process is complex, there are decades-old commitments to honor (e.g. veterans), there are reams of data to sift, and math is often involved. But could budgeting be improved with the addition of more thoughtful processes? Learn about and discuss two promising practices—an online simulation and a direct outreach to residents.

Co-Designing our Transpartisan Journey
Lake Audubon • Advanced

Are you a transpartisan? Are you inspired to find political solutions that are transformative and beyond partisan labeling? Given the hyper-partisanship of media and politics in our country, many transpartisan leaders and citizens have started to ask: What can we create together? How do we support one another in our many efforts, and what is the relationship between local and national action? How do we measure our success? Join this powerful conversation where participants and presenters explore together what is possible within a transpartisan movement.

Corporations: A Key to Evolving Democracy
Ballroom B • Advanced

For better or worse, corporations are a key player in our democracy. This session explores questions about using D&D with and within corporations including: What might we learn from using D&D in corporate settings that can be applied to community interactions? What are some of the challenges of integrating D&D into the business world? What are the most important differences between D&D in corporate vs. community settings? Why and how might the two sectors engage with each other? What have we learned works and what should we avoid? We will interweave brief presentations with individual reflection and small and large group conversations.

Facilitating With Grace, Even Under Fire
Lake Anne A • Intermediate

When contentious topics are under discussion, even the most skilled facilitator can come under fire, charged by a participant with bias or another form of inadequacy. In this session, the presenters will lay out some basic principles of facilitation, introduce the Walk About Model for staying grounded in difficult moments, then have small groups work on a case asking not only “What would you do?” but also, “What would your thinking be?” and “What does that suggest about how you see your role?”

Fun with Conflicting Worldviews: Building Bridges Between the Boxes We Inhabit
Lake Thoreau • Intermediate

Comedian Stephen Colbert, in his conservative persona, has said he doesn’t watch the news because “reality has a well-known liberal bias.” We laugh, but Colbert isn’t alone. How can we advance toward solutions when values shape our understanding of facts? Cultural cognition research shows that Americans’ decision making often reflects deeper conflicts between values of individualism and community, equality and authority. Can we invite everyone into the conversation? In this lively, experiential workshop, we’ll explore our values and how to foster understanding across the cultural divide.

Moving From Nervous to Confident – A Peer Exchange on Online Engagement Tools
Ballroom C • Intermediate

It’s clear that online tools will play a role in the next generation of engagement. Still, many practitioners remain nervous and have questions. Let’s talk about them! As a peer exchange, this lively session will include experienced practitioners who can offer a unique perspective: each was once skeptical and now uses a wide variety of tools regularly. The Oregon Story: Creating Statewide Infrastructure for Civic Engagement
North Point/Tall Oaks • Advanced

Oregon has been a testing ground for new governance approaches, and the last 5 years have been no different. 3 new innovations empower Oregonians to contribute feedback, ideas, and resources to decision-makers and public projects: the Oregon Solutions Network, Oregon’s Kitchen Table, and the Citizens Initiative Review. Presenters will talk about lessons learned in embedding a civic infrastructure within state government and then engage in discussion about where such efforts may go from here and applicability to their own states, and participants will leave with an understanding of components needed to embed such infrastructure.

Strategies for Gathering Data to Support Evaluation of D&D Initiatives
Lake Anne B • Intermediate

Useful evaluation is grounded in careful program documentation. Practitioners and researchers will explore strategies, techniques, and tools for collecting information about what happens before, during, and after D&D initiatives. Participants will work in small groups and plenaries to identify: (1) program elements for which we need to collect data in order to analyze individual programs and conduct comparative analyses, and (2) strategies to overcome challenges that make it difficult to gather program data. Session leaders will also highlight some useful tools and strategies currently available.

The Student as Facilitator
Ballroom A • Beginner

This workshop brings together higher education faculty with experience in training students to moderate deliberative discussions. The faculty members participating in this workshop employ multiple course and program-based methods when training students in facilitating deliberation. Training Small Group Facilitators and Note Takers: Building and Sharing Capacity
Lake Fairfax B • Advanced

Many deliberative exercises rely on volunteer facilitators and note takers: how can we best prepare and support them? We will share methods used in two citizen deliberations around climate change in Alberta, including training sessions and materials, weekly debriefings and orientations, mentoring for new and seasoned facilitators, and process designed to minimize the impact of weak facilitation. Our Aspirations, Barriers and Break-Through Ideas

People who are committed to dialogue and deliberation are by definition hopeful people. We believe a better world is possible, and strive to create the conditions needed to enable people to solve problems and resolve conflicts more effectively.

Imagine we are able to travel into a not-so-distant future when D&D has taken a positive leap forward in our society. What do you see? What is it that we are aspiring to as a field in this next phase of our development? Saturday’s plenary is designed to help us consider what we want dialogue, deliberation, and engagement to look like a generation from now, and to identify promising practices and co-create new ideas that will help us get there.

We’ll begin by exploring our aspirations for our work and our field, with the help of dog & pony dc — a well-loved ensemble of local artists who devise innovative performances that incorporate new ways for audiences to experience theatre. Artists from dog & pony will lead us in creating a vision for “the future of D&D” through collage, infographics, “dramatagraphs” and word-cloud poetry.

Six of our colleagues from Alberta Climate Dialogue (ABCD) will then take the stage to ground us in a timely real-world example of an ambitious, inspiring project. As deliberation practitioners addressing a global issue at a local level, their aspirations have been high from the start of the project, and we can all learn from their challenges and how they’ve overcome them.

We’ll close out this plenary with table discussions on how we might address the barriers we see as getting in the way of our realizing our aspirations for this work. While it’s important to have a clear vision of the future we hope for, it is equally important to be clear about what stands in our way and devise plans for getting around those obstacles.

Through engaging our community leading up to the conference, NCDD has pre-identified four broad categories of persistent barriers to effective dialogue and deliberation work:

1. Lack of trust in our democracy, in our leaders, and in one another
2. Unequal access to D&D practices and to government
3. Lack of cohesion as a clearly delineated field of practice with all parts in communication
4. Structural barriers within our democracy and in our own infrastructure

Rather than lamenting the barriers themselves, table conversations will focus on strategies for overcoming the specific barrier at hand. Some tables will have pre-identified discussion leaders who will share leading edge strategies that are already in the works, and elicit more ideas and examples from their table.

Each table’s top three ideas will be collected and entered into the online participation platform Codigital, so conference participants and others in the D&D community who aren’t present will have the opportunity to hone and prioritize the ideas, providing guidance to NCDD and many others who are interested in paving the way for this important work.
Prior to the conference, NCDD reached out ten organizations in our community, interviewing them about their ecosystems of work and partnerships and their aspirations for the future. We had graphic recorders illustrate these conversations so we could share them with you at the conference. Be sure to take a moment to check them out up close!
Saturday Evening Activities

Members of our local planning team for NCDD 2014 have organized four amazing Field Trips for conference participants on Saturday evening. There’s something for everybody in these four field trips: music, history, performance, monuments, yummy food, and of course, lots of great discussion and networking.

We left time in the schedule for you to enjoy what the DC area has to offer on Saturday starting at 4pm, and though you’re free to do whatever you’d like that night, you can’t go wrong with these four options.

Check at the registration/information desk to sign up for a field trip if you haven’t already — though you’ll have to see which trips still have spots open!

Trekking through Generations of Democratic Participation in DC
$15 - Hosted by the Close Up Foundation; organized by Rachel Talbert

Join us for this stimulating and exciting tour of Washington DC as a place of historic struggles over citizen participation and current debates over changing neighborhoods. This tour will feature three rounds of discussion at iconic spots around town: At Lincoln Park, A Tale of Two Statues; over dinner in a neighborhood restaurant, a conversation about sustainability and/or gentrification; and after we eat, a discussion of the Three Faces of Democracy.

We’ll examine the history of our democracy through the protective lens at the Jefferson Memorial, the progressive lens at the FDR Memorial and the participatory lens at the MLK memorial (with a drive by or stop at the Lincoln Memorial if there is time).

We're renting a 50-seat bus for this fun and professionally-run tour, which is presented by our friends at the Close Up Foundation. Close Up has years of experience giving high-quality educational tours in DC. Transportation is covered by the $15 fee, but you’ll cover the costs of your own dinner.

Stage Performance of Toast
$15 - Performed by dog & pony dc; organized by Marla Crockett

Enjoy an evening of participatory theater on Capitol Hill in DC! Presented by dog & pony dc, Toast is about “a secret society of inventors [that] invites the audience to collaboratively push the boundaries of our current technology and explore the awesome potential of group innovation.” dog & pony dc is a respected Washington, DC company that explores new ways for audiences to experience theatre. dog & pony will be helping us integrate the arts during our conference, so you can reciprocate by supporting them during their final showing of Toast!

NCDD has purchased a block of 15 tickets for this fun performance. The theatre is a block away from Barracks Row, a lovely neighborhood with tons of great eating options. Tickets are $15 per person, and you’ll cover your own transportation and dinner costs. The performance is at 7:30pm at the Capitol Hill Arts Workshop (545 7th St. SE in DC). The group will take the metro from Reston into the city.

U Street Food & Jazz Tour
$40 including food - Hosted by Natalie Hopkinson

Duke Ellington, Marvin Gaye, Chuck Brown—all are Washington, D.C. native musicians who have helped to shape the history of Washington's U Street, once the heart of the all-black segregated entertainment district. The strip was devastated by the 1968 riots that followed Martin Luther King's assassination, but in the past decade it has experienced a revival and is now home to a vibrant mix of people, music, and restaurants. Join author Natalie Hopkinson, Ph.D., fellow of the Interactivity Foundation's Arts & Society initiative, and resident of Greater U Street, as she guides a 2-hour food and jazz tour. Come hungry, and fee free to check out some shows after the tour!

Natalie frequently publishes essays on culture and education in the Washington Post, The Root, the New York Times and Essence magazine and has authored two books, most recently Go-Go Live: The Musical Life and Death of a Chocolate City. You’ll take the metro from Reston into the city.
Field Trip to Historic Morven Park
$25 - Hosted by Morven Park staff; organized by Abby Pfisterer

Join us for a special evening at Morven Park focused on the theme “Rural to Suburban to Urban: The Role of D&D in Changing Neighborhood Environments.” Morven Park is a gorgeous historic site in Leesburg, Virginia that was home of former Virginia Governor Westmoreland Davis. It was once in the countryside, but today the park sits on the border between rural traditions and suburban sprawl. On this field trip, we’ll look at the implications of changing from a rural to urban setting now and a century ago.

A tour of the historic Davis mansion will be followed by light refreshments and wine from a local vineyard. Over drinks we’ll discuss the social changes that occur as an area moves from rural to suburban/urban and what role dialogue and deliberation can play in engaging the local community through these transitions.

You’ll also hear about Morven Park’s Center for Civic Impact, and discuss how educators are increasingly turning to non-traditional centers of learning, like historic sites, to promote civic learning and democratic engagement and help restore public faith in our democracy. We’re chartering a van to take the group to Morven Park.

Not Going On A Field Trip?

If you’re not going on one of these four trips, we encourage you to think about self-organizing your own meetings and dinners tonight. There are many restaurants right around the hotel, and you can use the restaurant list and map for Reston Town Center to plan your evening. Both the restaurant list and map are in your tote bags, and can also be found at the registration/info area and downstairs at the Concierge.

There are 50 shops, 30 restaurants, and a 13-screen movie theatre right outside the hotel. The Hyatt is marked as “K” on the map. Be sure to also check out the Classifieds Board and the post at www.ncdd.org/16342 to see what others are proposing.

You don’t even have to leave the Hyatt if you don’t want to! There are lots of small meeting nooks in the hotel, as well as a nice restaurant, bar, and Panera Bread.

Of course, you can also plan your own trips into DC. Those needing transportation to the Wiehle-Reston East stop (on the Silver Line) can either ask the Concierge if the shuttle is available or hop on the local Fairfax Connector Bus #505, which picks up and drops off behind the hotel and at the metro stop for $1.75.

Many friendships, professional relationships, and new partnerships have been hatched at NCDD conferences, and we encourage you to take full advantage of tonight’s flex time!

Screening of “BRING IT TO THE TABLE” - 8:30 pm

After dinner, napping, shopping or whatever you do, come back to the hotel and enjoy a screening of the not-yet-released film “Bring It To The Table” starting at 8:30 pm.

Filmmaker Julie Winokur traveled across the country with a small star-spangled table, inviting people of all stripes to sit down and share the roots of their political beliefs. Afterward, talk with filmmaker Julie Winokur about her journey, and about how you might utilize the film.

“Bring It to the Table” is produced by Talking Eyes Media, a non-partisan, non-profit organization with extensive experience producing films, books and multi-media on pressing social issues.
The Community Collaboration Game
Ballroom C • Beginner

True collaboration is hard to create and even harder to keep. In The Collaboration Game, attendees learn how a simulation can help people, businesses, organizations, and communities see and experience each other by generating demand for what they do when they are at their best, and how to hold onto that stellar reputation. This workshop will explore the ins and outs of living in smaller communities and how the important relationships and conversations that happen behind the scenes can make all the difference. The Collaboration Game was created by The Inside Out Partnership Ltd. This is a partnership of Alchemy & the Orton Family Foundation.

Cooperation Skills and the New Economy Movement
Lake Fairfax B • Beginner

This hands-on workshop explores how everyday people are applying facilitation and dialogue skills on the ground. We’ll explore how trained mediators and facilitators can support the popularization of more sophisticated group decision making, conflict resolution, and productive dialogue in new economy spaces. Throughout North America, communities are creating a new economy that puts people, place, and the planet first. These communities use dialogue and deliberation to weave economic democracy into new structures and practices—from community-led participatory budgeting to consumer and worker-owned cooperatives. New Economy models are human-centered; fundamentally based in democratic process of cooperation and collaboration.

Don’t Eat Your Broccoli. Eat Warm Cookies. Yep, This is an Actual Session.
Lake Anne A • Beginner

Important issues are often boring and mind-numbing: Budgetary allocations, taxes, conversations about moral values. For regular folks who are working hard and raising families, the idea of purposefully engaging in these meetings sounds like punishment. So, how DO we get people to come and engage? We’re going to share how 3 organizations have navigated through these puzzles and brainstorm new and helpful ways to bridge community divisions, bring people together and talk WITH instead of AT each other. Cookies MAY be served. No broccoli though!

Getting Real about the Politics of Environmental Deliberations
Ballroom B • Intermediate

How can deliberations on complex environmental issues like climate change make a real political difference? This raises questions around framing, partnership with government, links to civil society, and incremental vs. transformative understandings of change. Members of Alberta Climate Dialogue will host a short deliberative exercise on climate change, then reflect on political issues that have played out in our practice. We’ll facilitate discussion of how dialogue and deliberation can support the systemic responses we so urgently need to our toughest environmental challenges.

Understanding Local Government Cultures: Practical Partnering for Civic Engagement

Lake Audubon • Intermediate

Local government plays a central role in many dialogue and deliberation projects, as host, client or essential ally. Yet, officials may have mixed results from past public engagement experiences, skeptical colleagues, political constraints, limited staff and budgets, and higher priority responsibilities. How can we understand their realities and be more effective partners in what’s often a change management process? We’ll share findings from candid interviews with local officials and invite you to share your stories and lessons learned. Together we will reflect on ways to assess the need and opportunities for culture change to promote more local public participation.

Unleashing the Student Voice

Lake Anne B • Beginner

Students need, want and deserve to be heard on the public-policy issues affecting their lives, but institutional and legal obstacles can deter their participation and marginalize their voices. We’ll share success stories about using social media to invite young people into the dialogue about education policy, and how students can take ownership of improving the state of their own legal rights through legislative reform, making the campus a safer place to speak up without fear.

What’s Equity Have to Do With It? Ensuring Inclusive Participation

Ballroom A • Intermediate

Many of us strive to involve all kinds of people in our community civic efforts, but we don’t always succeed. Why is this? We schedule discussions that meet people’s busy schedules. We provide childcare and food for participants. These tactics can work, but there are often less obvious ways in which we render such tactics useless. This session will introduce the concepts of privilege, power and equity, and will draw on the experiences of the audience to surface the successes and challenges of ensuring that people of all backgrounds can take part in civic life.

Lake Fairfax B • Intermediate

Where do we stand in 2014 in bringing these related fields together, formally or informally? Does a public policy conflict resolution practitioner need to know the D&D and civil discourse worlds, and vice versa? If so, what should they know? What are the best ways to make that happen? What new connections could or should be made? Are these different names for the same discipline? Different disciplines? Related elements of the same discipline? This session will review and build on earlier efforts (including a similar session at the 2013 ACR-EPP Conference), and provide a venue for discussion.

#CanWeTalkGender: Safe, Compassionate Conversations about Gender
Lake Anne B • Intermediate

This year’s hashtag firestorm (#YesAllWomen / #notallmen) exemplified the daunting difficulties and myriad sensitivities involved in any conversation about gender. D&D practitioners are uniquely equipped to address those challenges by fostering a safe space for all genders and creating powerful questions for unlocking discussion. But how do we foster that space? And what are the questions? This session will engage all participants in imagining a fruitful, respectful, compassionate conversation.

Envisioning Civic Infrastructure: Designs for Durable Dialogue & Engagement
Lake Thoreau • Beginner

To make dialogue and deliberation more powerful and sustainable, communities need to rethink their “civic infrastructure” – but how do we help people grapple with that abstract-sounding term? We believe pictures and other visualizations can help. This interactive session will describe some of the ways participation has been visualized, including Sherri Arnstein’s participation ladder, the IAP2 Spectrum, and NCDD’s Engagement Streams. We will present ideas about the ingredients for civic infrastructure, offer some images we have developed, and help participants develop first draft images or diagrams to help them think about long-term engagement in their communities.

Negotiating Deliberation Projects with Civil Servants and Elected Officials
Lake Anne A • Intermediate

Many of us have battle stories about working with public servants and elected officials. Where in the policy cycle should deliberation take place? How can we secure real impact? How do we navigate constructions of what’s risky, what’s productive, and what citizens need to learn and decide? Presenters will share lessons learned through the Citizens’ Panel on Edmonton’s Energy and Climate Challenges, a six-day deliberation in partnership with municipal government. Participants will see what pointers and signposts they can develop for those working with government on deliberative projects.

Politics, Race & Abortion: Using Controversial Topics to Build Meaningful Connections
Ballroom B • Intermediate

Polarized, politicized and controversial topics don’t have to be divisive. These session leaders all have experiences and data that prove these topics can actually be used to bring people together. Each leader comes from a different organization and issue area, and in this session will share different approaches and models for having conversations about “hot button” topics. This interactive section will give participants tools and strategies to have conversations across partisan lines, and address the how and why behind the way people approach these topics.

The Intersection of Slam Poetry and Justice

Ballroom A • Beginner

With sites like Upworthy picking up performance poetry videos in droves, poems addressing sexuality, body image, racism and many other social justice issues are now getting millions of views on YouTube. Unlike any year prior, 2014 has been the year for performance poetry to be accessible to all. In this session, participants will learn how poetry crosses the intersection of social justice, how to utilize poetry as a tool for change and how to keep the dialogue going about the “it” poem of the moment long after the media has moved on. This session will include performances of poetry.

Video Deliberations: the Opportunity and Challenge

Ballroom C • Intermediate

Online video conferencing is quickly becoming an important tool for dialogue and deliberation. This session will feature lessons learned from a number of projects that used Google Hangouts, Webex and other platforms to conduct live video conferences for people to discuss public policy issues—including Interactivity Foundation projects, Face the Facts Hangouts, Soliya’s cross-cultural web dialogues, and the NCDD 2012 Catalyst Award winner Real Dialogues. Through recorded video, live demonstrations and group discussion, participants will explore the strengths, challenges, capacities and pitfalls of online video conferencing for public discourse.

What’s Next, WV? A Statewide Conversation . . . One Community at a Time

Lake Audubon • Intermediate

What’s Next, West Virginia? is a nonpartisan, statewide initiative to encourage local dialogue about West Virginia’s future and to help communities plan actions, based on their own ideas for building stronger local economies. Through sharing the story of What’s Next, WV, project partners will paint a picture of the growing civic infrastructure and community capacity to talk and work together on public issues in West Virginia. Participants will share their own insights in a discussion about what it takes to develop ongoing practices of civic engagement in a community—or even a state!

Betty Knighton, Director, West Virginia Center for Civic Life
Kent Spellman, Director, West Virginia Community Development HUB

Young People Are Citizens: Preparing the Next Generation for Active Citizenship

North Point/Tall Oaks • Beginner

This session will highlight insights, stories, and lessons learned from ongoing community-based projects in Alabama that increase civic knowledge, build civic skills, and enhance civic dispositions among young citizens. During action-oriented, small-group discussions, we will seek to answer the question: “How can we forge new pathways within higher education, community organizations, K-12 schools, and local government to more effectively engage young people in public deliberation and active civic learning?”

Cristin Foster, Program Director, David Mathews Center for Civic Life
Hollie Cost, Mayor of Montevallo and Professor of Education and Service Learning Coordinator, University of Montevallo
Lowery McNeal, Living Democracy Fellow, Auburn University
Lauren Davis, Intern, University of Montevallo/David Mathews Center for Civic Life
Gamification, Rapid Response & Our Path Forward

In our final plenary, we’ll begin with a panel focused on Gamification and Public Engagement. This panel will examine how the principles of game design can strengthen public engagement efforts. We’ll look at several inspiring examples of gamified public engagement and identify ways to think about these tools for your work. We’ll also explore when a game design approach might not be appropriate.

We’ll then hear from featured speaker Grande Lum. Grande is the Director of the Department of Justice’s Community Relations Service (CRS). Known as “America’s Peacemaker,” CRS has worked with thousands of communities over the years, many of whom came together in crisis and emerged stronger and more unified. CRS delivers four services: mediation of disputes, facilitation of dialogue, training, and consulting.

Utilizing game design techniques, we’ll then explore how we can work together to achieve one of our field’s aspirations: rapid response to issues or crises that call for dialogue and deliberation.

Facilitator and community artist Jessica Solomon will lead us in this final exercise, after telling us a little about the bold and inventive U.S. Department of Arts & Culture. Recognizing that arts and culture are our most powerful untapped resources for social change, a group of artists launched the USDAC last October. Since then, and with a shoestring budget, thousands of people have been brought together in local “Imagining” events to envision their communities in the year 2034. Note: the USDAC is an act of collective imagination — not an official government agency.

Our Gamification and Public Engagement Panelists…
- Josh Lerner, Executive Director of the Participatory Budgeting Project and author of Making Democracy Fun
- Amy Lee, Program Officer at the Kettering Foundation
- Gene Koo, former director of iCivics, Justice Sandra Day O’Connor’s educational nonprofit (also serving as moderator)

Featured Speakers…

GRANDE H. LUM
Grande H. Lum was confirmed as the Director of the Community Relations Service (CRS) of the Department of Justice in June 2012. Grande has extensive expertise in dispute resolution, including providing mediation, facilitation and training. He has worked with students, educators, diplomats, community leaders, law enforcement, government officials, attorneys, scientists and business executives. Before joining CRS, Grande was a clinical professor at the University of California Hastings School of the Law, where he directed its Center for Negotiation and Dispute Resolution. His published works include The Negotiation Fieldbook, which is currently in its second edition.

JESSICA SOLOMON
Jessica Solomon is the director of Art in Praxis, a social practice “laboratory” blurring the lines between making, performance, cultural organizing and community engagement. She also serves as a Cultural Agent of the U.S. Department of Arts and Culture. A facilitator, connector, organization development practitioner and community artist in DC, Jessica currently serves on the Executive Committee of Alternate Roots and the Creative Placemaking Leadership Council. She has gained an experiential education as an organization development practitioner and community artist in Washington, DC, designing programming that brings creativity to the work of social change and sustainability.
The Interactivity Foundation works through a facilitated small-group discussion process to increase both the quality and quantity of our public discussions by engaging citizens in the exploration and development of contrasting possibilities, or broad directions, for longer-term public policy. Our work is primarily focused on three types of group discussion. First, longer-term “Project” discussions with selected panelists help to develop the contrasting possibilities for our discussion guides. Second, shorter-term “Public” discussion series use those discussion guides as starting points for further discussion, exploration, and development. And, third, we work with educators in classroom, online, and other educational settings to support student-centered discussion. We are a non-profit, non-partisan, non-advocacy organization. For more information or to download copies of any of our discussion guides or other publications, please visit our website.
Public Conversations Project

When a breakdown in trust and relationship is part of the problem, Public Conversations offers a solution.

We work locally, nationally, and globally to provide dialogue facilitation, training, and coaching that deepen trust, strengthen communities, and reduce polarization and stereotyping. Contact us for a consultation at inquiry@publicconversations.org or 617.923.1216.

The Engaging News Project provides research-based techniques for engaging online audiences in commercially viable and democratically beneficial ways.

The project tests web-based strategies for informing audiences, promoting substantive discourse, and helping citizens to understand diverse views. At the same time, we analyze business outcomes, such as clicks and time on page. Partnering with local and national news organizations has provided us valuable information about what works, and what doesn’t. And by advancing both journalistic and business goals, our techniques are designed with contemporary newsrooms in mind.

Alynd’s goal is to get you aligned with others, with your teams and with your organization to accelerate your productivity, improve your performance and bring greater balance to your life, whether you are a manager or a contributor. That is exactly how we designed Alynd, to support that natural process of collaboration which creates a system of accountability where people do what they say they are going to do because they want to do it, they want to win for themselves, and for each other. On a functional level, Alynd enables you to track the commitments that people make to you and you make to others every day in the flow of your work, so that you never forget what was promised.
